Quest Programs

A visit by a lecturer to the student's home in the hope of increasing connections between college staff and students in their community. There are many possible goals for these visits including: bridging cultural barriers, reporting on academic progress, enlisting parental support to increase academic achievement, and giving parents the tools to do so. Ideally these home visits should be conducted before the college year begins to help the faculty to find out about the needs and interest of individual students. This initial meeting is important because it helps the parent and student become acquainted with the faculty in a non-intimidating way.
